Chair

I think this curvy chair by Barry Dixon represents a whole new style: Gothic Glamour.

EVERYWHERE WE LOOK...

Quatrefoils

Do we have Showtime's The Tudors to thank for this trend? The medieval cloverleaf is suddenly the most modern motif around...

Mirror

The use of dyed gray parchment in this quartet of mirror pieces fits the sophisticated Gothic motif flawlessly in the still room.

The Doge's Palace in Venice is an excellent example of medieval gothic architecture. Journal, Smithsonian

A Little Backstory

Today's designers are using trefoils, painted trefoils, especially—on everything from mirrors to chairs. Why not? Gothic style has lightened up over the years. Style-setters have long championed the architectural style. Horace Walpole, the English writer and aesthete, spent years cross-country, home, Strawberry Hill, setting off the Gothic Revival. Legendary designer John Fowler lived in a cottage called the Hunting Lodge, considered one of the most charming houses. After his death, the house was bought by the actor and king of cool Nicholas Haslam. Move in, it's hip enough for Haslam, it's hip enough for

Key Chains

These quatrefoils are like mood rings. You're either carrying this than a lousy rabbit's foot?
